Bud Carter Conservation Trail

The Bud Carter trail is located in Yarmouth Port with access points on North Dennis Road and West Great Western Road. The trail was named in memory of Bud Carter who spent many years walking the area and volunteering for various projects that benefited the Conservation Commission. A memorial bench is located approximately 600 feet from the North Dennis Road trailhead, overlooking Reservoir Pond.

The trail is situated on what is known as the Sandwich Moraine, a significant glacial feature left over from the last ice age of 20,000 years ago. Large granite rock formations and erratics dot the landscape. The area was mined for granite during the past and occasional drill holes for blasting can still be seen. Old aerial photography shows the access roads to the mining locations. The topography is quite diverse indicating profound ice age contact and deposition. The highest point in Yarmouth occurs within this area. Please remember to be cautious during walking for many loose stones along the trail. The trail also has a moderate amount of up and down terrain.

The area boasts two scenic vistas. A large sand pit occurs near West Great Western Road. The summit of the pit offers exceptional views to the north and west. Manomet Point in Plymouth is visible on most days. A look to the west shows the undulating hills of the Sandwich Moraine. The second vista overlooks the Rocky Farm Bog on Weir Rd. The working bog has been in the Grew family for decades. The best time for viewing both vistas is in the fall, especially during the cranberry harvest.

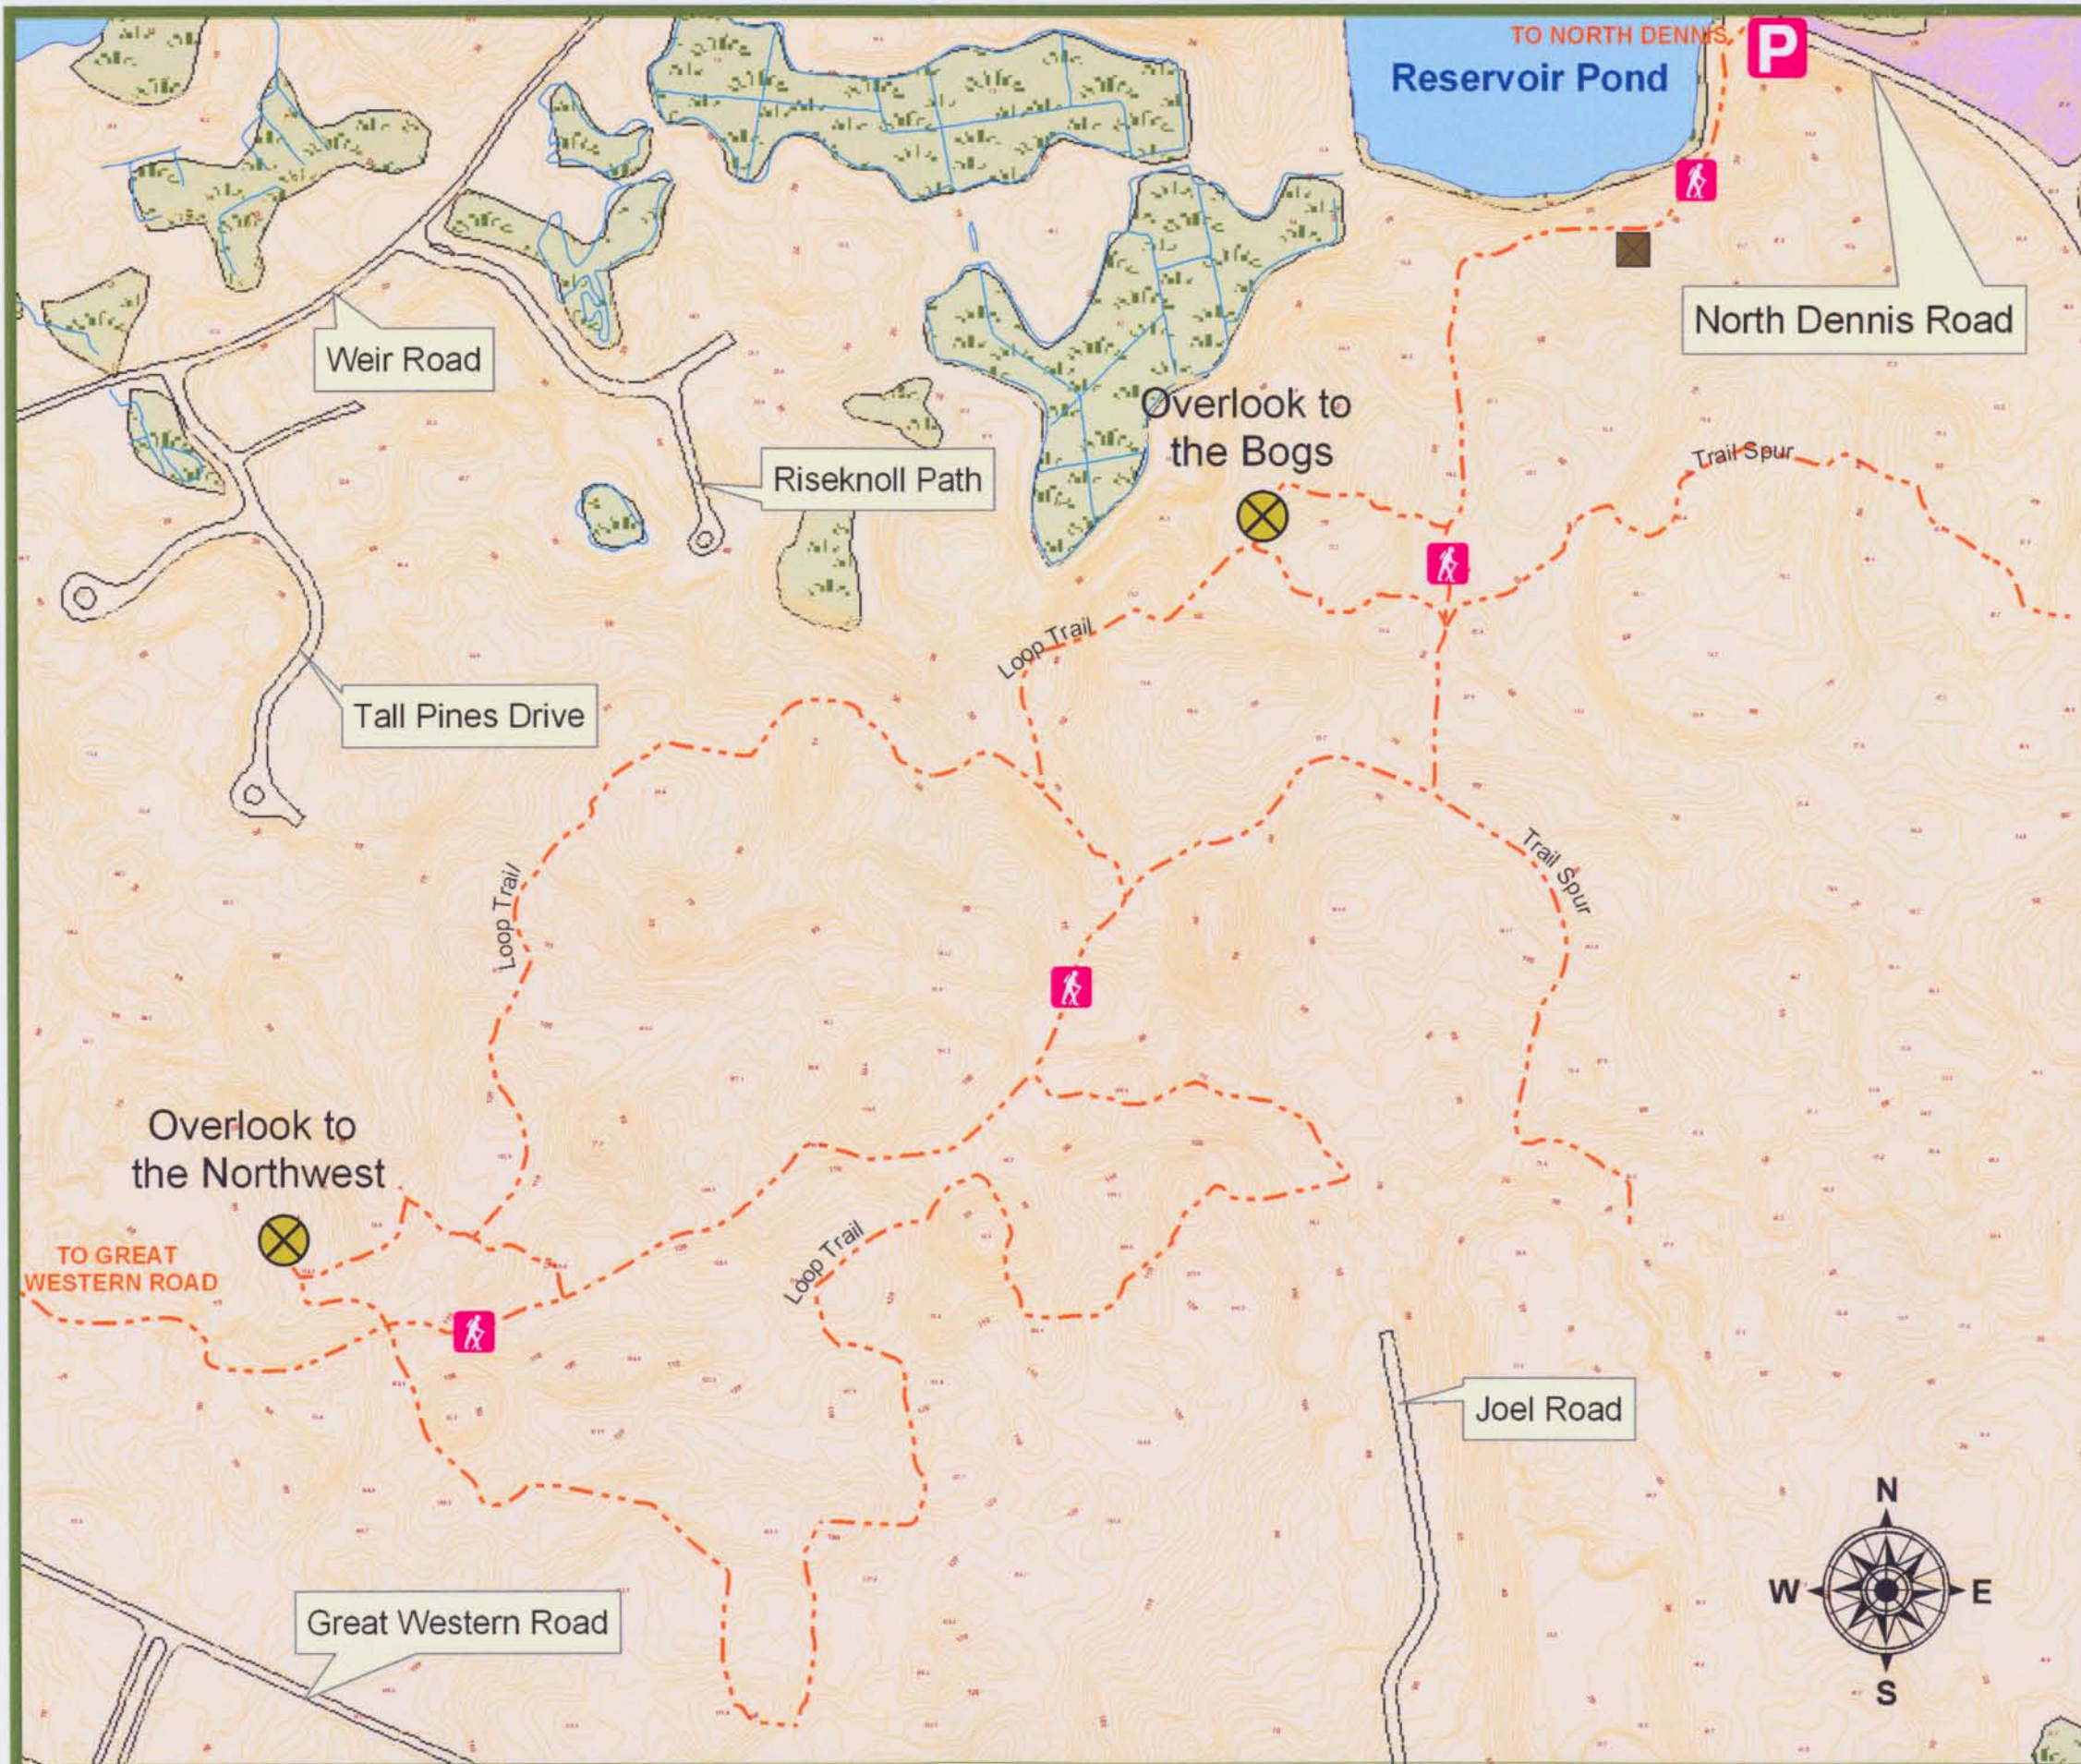

Many side trails and loops occur within this 300 acre land tract so; if not familiar with the area, please carry a copy of this brochure and a compass.
